What are cookies?

Cookies are small text files that are stored on your hard drive and contain certain settings and data to be sent to our website through your internet browser. In principle, a distinction is made between two types of cookies, so-called non-persistent cookies, which are deleted as soon as you close your browser, and persistent cookies, which remain stored on your hard drive for a longer period of time or indefinitely. This makes it easier for you to use the website, whereas certain data about you is saved, so you don't have to enter it repeatedly.

Most of the cookies we use are automatically deleted from your hard drive after closing the browser (the so-called non-persistent cookies). Non-persistent cookies are, for example, used to ensure that the cookie information is not displayed on each page. In addition, we also use cookies that remain stored on your hard drive. During your next visit the system will automatically recognise that you have previously visited our website. These persistent cookies are stored on the hard drive and are deleted after a predetermined period of time.
